How the weeks will fly!

In a few short months, when your wonderful baby begins to sit up and take notice — and starts to grow out of that tenderly-prepared little trousseau you'll find this cardigan a splendid wardrobe addition. It's snug-fitting, but has plenty of room for sturdy growth, and it looks just as cute as a button. Another point that any busy mother will appreciate is its simplicity. It's easy to make — no complicated shaping or fancy stitches. Of course, you'll guard against matting and shrinking by avoiding strong soaps and too-hot water.

STOCKINGS

Wash after every wearing. Turn inside-out and wash in lukewarm Lux suds. Rinse thoroughly in lukewarm water. Roll in thick towel to remove excess moisture. Ease into shape very gently. Dry away from direct heat or sunlight. Do not iron. (These instructions apply to silk, rayon, nylon, and lisle stockings.)

Washing in pure, gentle Lux preserves elasticity, prevents many ladders, makes stockings last longer. That's why it's a good idea to wash them in Lux after every wearing. Nylon stockings dry quickly, rayon stockings dry slowly, and should not be worn until thoroughly dry. Be careful your fingernails do not snag stockings. Remove rings, except band-rings, before washing.

SILKS

Squeeze in lukewarm Lux suds. Rinse thoroughly in clear lukewarm water. Don't wring or twist. Roll in a dry, rough towel to remove excess water, unroll and hang up. Iron when slightly damp, with a moderately hot iron. Shantung and tussore should be ironed when quite dry — on the wrong side.

To test coloured or patterned silks for colour-fastness before washing, squeeze a small sample of the material in a glass of clear lukewarm water. If the water remains clear or shows only a slight discoloration, the colour is safe in Lux. If it's safe in water, it's safe in Lux.

CORSETS

Lux dissolves instantly and is ideal for articles containing rubberized fabrics. Squeeze through rich lukewarm Lux suds, washing both inside and out. Rinse very thoroughly in lukewarm water. To dry, roll in a thick towel, kneading to let it absorb the moisture. Do not twist or wring. Non-elastic parts can be ironed with a warm iron, while still slightly damp.

If foundations are washed frequently they last longer and fit better. Garments worn next to the skin should always be washed frequently, as perspiration weakens threads and elastic. Never hang your girdle by the suspenders but fold over an unheated rail to dry. Bras should be ironed over a round pad to preserve the shape.

WOOLLENS

Lux is ideal for woollens — it dissolves instantly and rinses free from the fibres. Lux-washed woollens are as soft and fluffy as thistle-down. Squeeze gently in lukewarm suds; don't rub — this may cause "felting." Rinse thoroughly in lukewarm water. Put through a rubber wringer or roll in a rough towel to absorb excess moisture. Never twist or wring by hand.

Do the whole process as quickly as possible; woollens should never lie about damp. In the case of hand-knitted garments, support the weight in the hand when lifting out of the bowl, to prevent stretching. Dry flat, and ease into shape while drying.

RAYONS

Squeeze garment gently in lukewarm Lux suds. Treat carefully — don't rub, pull or twist. Most rayons are weak when wet. They regain their strength when dry. (See also instructions about testing for colour-fastness under Silks.) Iron on reverse side with a warm, not hot, iron, avoiding seams, fastenings and double thicknesses wherever possible.

Don't sprinkle with water to dampen rayons before ironing. If necessary, rinse the whole garment again. Dull-surface rayons should be ironed when almost dry, and free from visible damp patches. Fabrics such as marocain, moss crepe and georgette, which automatically contract in water, should be stretched gently in both directions under the iron when the material is almost dry.

BABY CLOTHES

Wash baby woollens as in Woollens above. Babies' napkins should be rinsed immediately in cold water and washed in hot Lux suds — then thoroughly rinsed. Boil in Lux suds once a week. Put napkins through a rubber wringer or wring by hand. Dry in open air and when possible in direct sunlight. Don't dry white woollens or silks near direct heat; they may turn yellow.

Baby garments should always be thoroughly aired. It is advisable, in damp or cold weather, to give a final airing before the fire. Lux — pure and soda-free — is ideal for baby things. It contains no harmful alkali to irritate a baby's tender skin.
